John James William Caslon I and Baskerville as the only three representatives of the trade in the country. William Caslon I had two apprentices in his Sheffield Foundry Thomas Cottrell and Joseph Jackson. They started a foundry of their own in direct competition to their employer in. In Jackson entered the Navy leaving Cottrell to carry on alone. Jackson left the navy in and continued to be employed in Thomas Cottrell Neveil's court Foundry for a short time. He commenced business in a separate Foundry with two fellow workman who helped to find the capital. When Jackson died in it was William Caslon I's grandson William Caslon III who purchased the foundry in Salisbury Square.
